PROJECT DESCRIPTION

Sociovert is a social media platform designed for niche communities which allows users to connect with like minded people

The website aims to create a safe and inclusive space , promote healthy and respectful online interactions between users

UNIQUE SELLING POINT (USP)

COMMUNITY

"Know all the news about your favourite topics in the NewsFeed page"

CHATS

"Connect with anonymous socioverts of similar taste to socialise in a better way"

"Don't let the language barrier hold you back from connecting with others "

Methodology Used

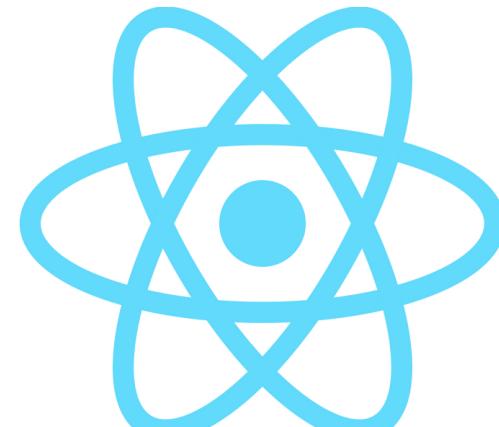

BUT WHY ???

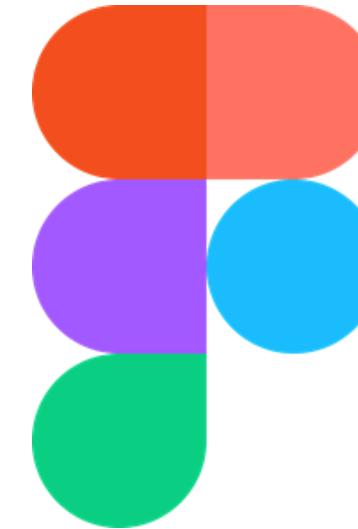

- Flexibility
- Team Collaboration
- Time to time Feedback

Implementation

- Technical design - The tech tools we used to develop this project

React Js

Chat GPT

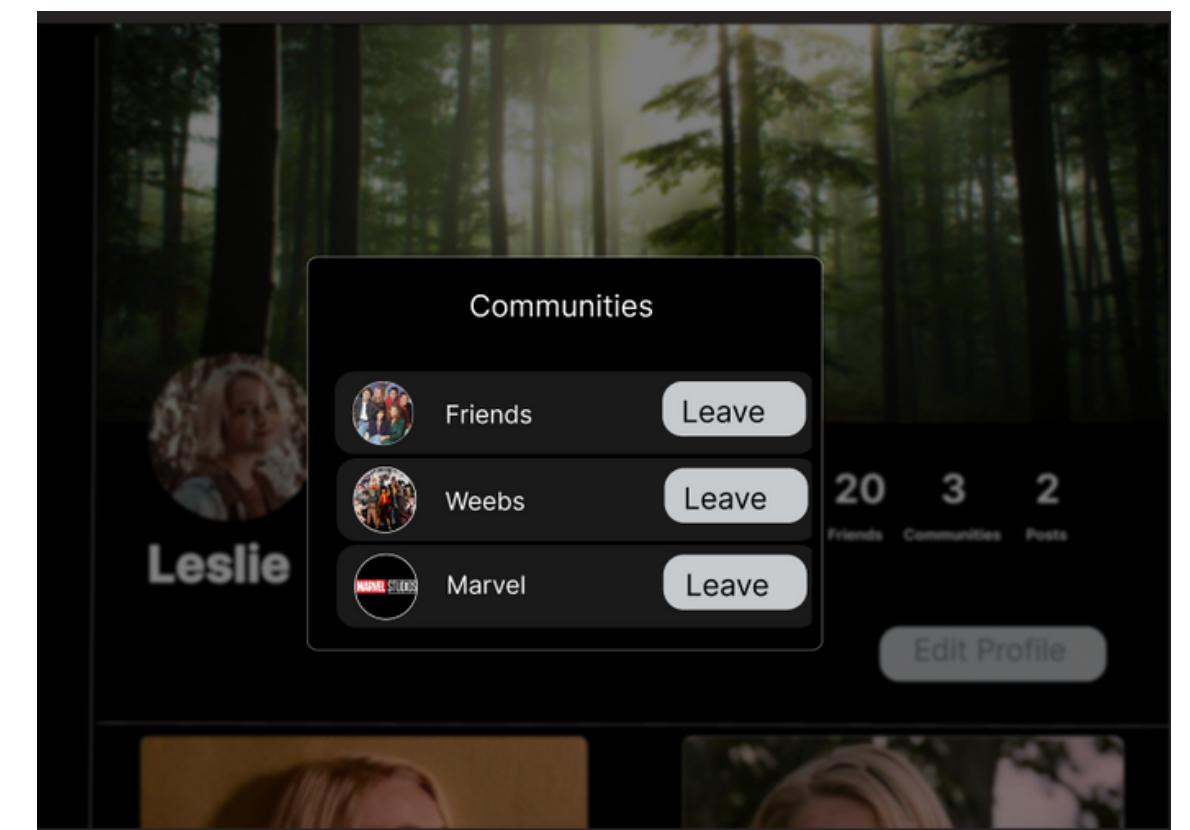

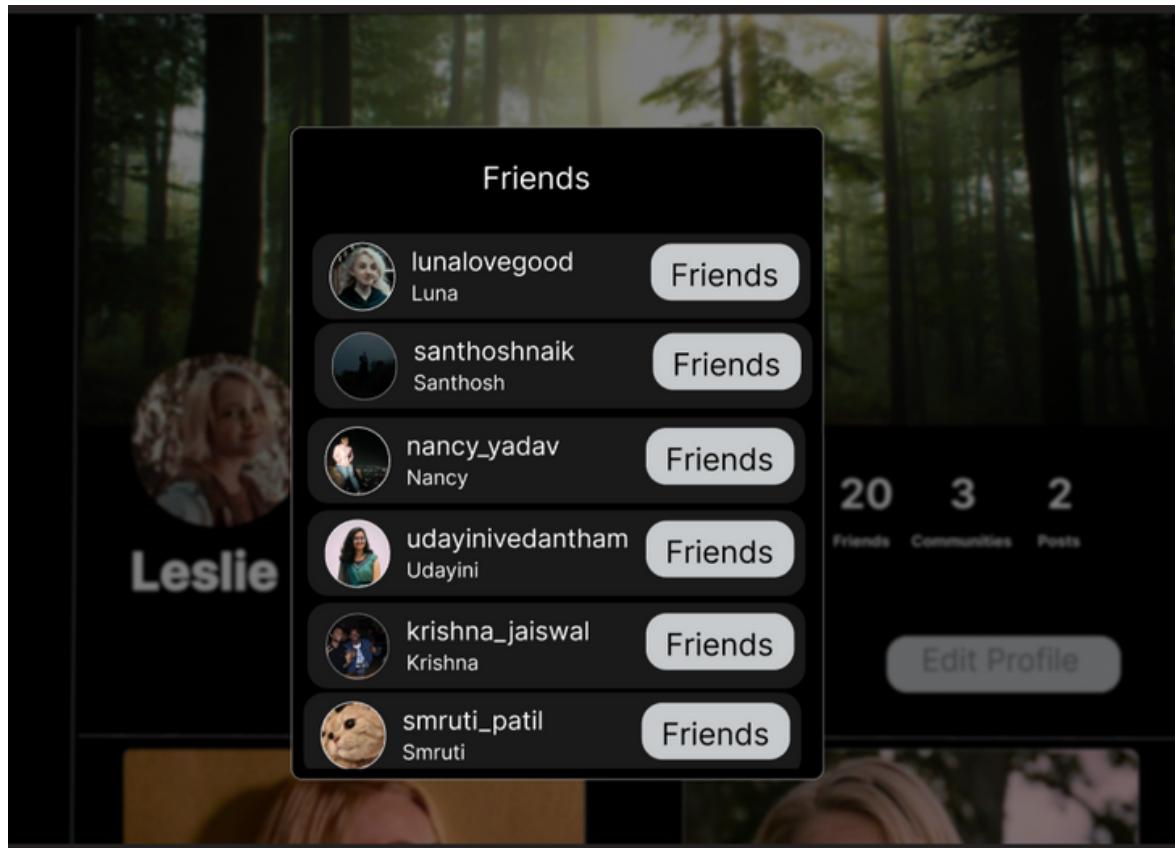

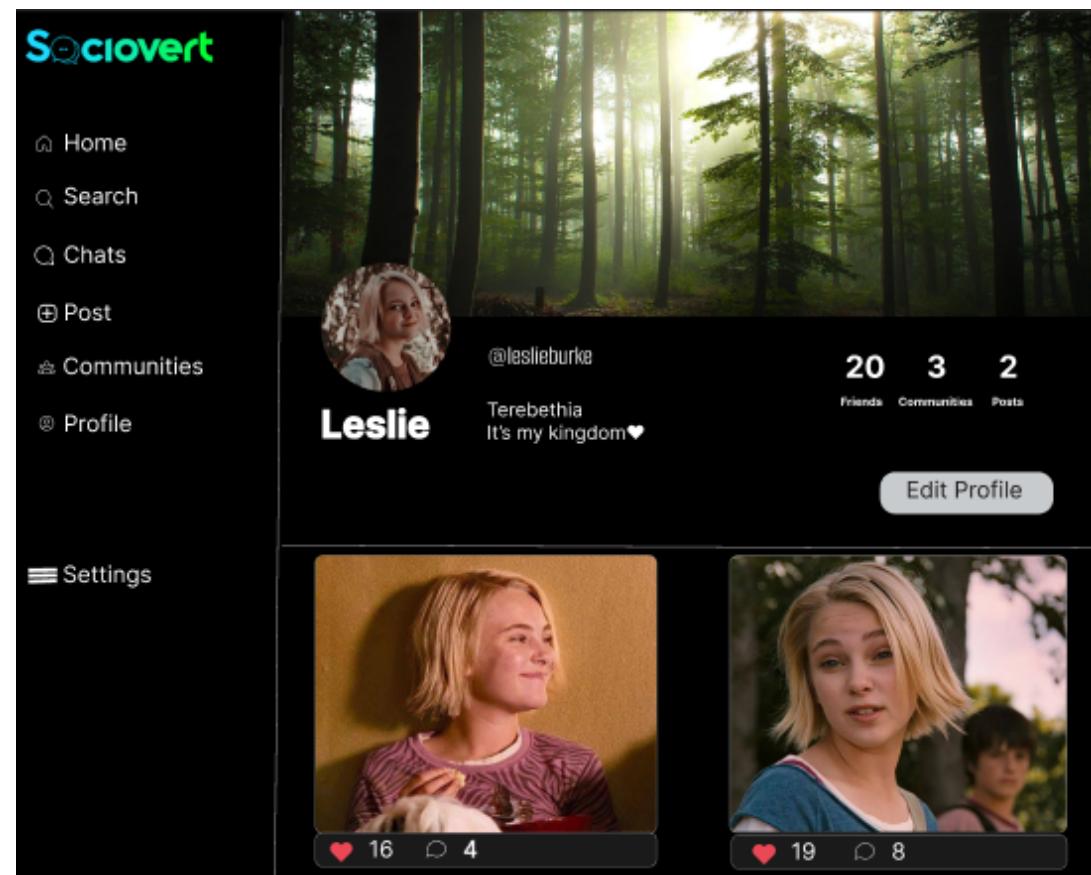

mongoDB®

express

- UI design - We used Figma platform to make our prototype

FUTURE SCOPE

Language translation while chatting

users with any language barrier problems, their messages will be translated to english or common language between the users

Gaming

Users can game together with fellow socioverts in the same community

Customised Community news

Users will be shown news or hot topics about the topic depending on each community

Streaming

Users can stream content or turn them into meets within the same community

Some of the tools used like ChatGPT, StackOverflow for code related issues and get some help with new ideas

"GET /API/users?userId=6416f97ce16a2570eb140380 HTTP/1.1" 304 -

A '304' status code indicates that the response to the 'axios' request was not modified and is the same as the cached version. This means that the browser did not receive a new response from the server, but instead retrieved the cached response.

This can happen when the browser sends a request with a 'If-Modified-Since' header that matches the last modified time of the cached response. In this case, the server will respond with a '304' status code and an empty body, indicating that the cached response is still valid and can be used.

Since the 'axios' request was successful in retrieving the data before, it is possible that the data is still cached in the browser and being retrieved from cache. You can try clearing the browser cache and sending the request again to see if that resolves the issue.

Alternatively, you can modify the server response headers to prevent caching of the '/users' endpoint. For example, you can add the following headers to the server response:

yaml
Cache-Control: no-cache, no-store, must-revalidate
Pragma: no-cache
Expires: 0

suggest some more which are not currently existing anywhere

Sure, here are a few more unique selling points that could make a social media website for niche communities stand out:

1. Collaborative content creation: Allow users to collaborate on creating content, such as writing articles or producing videos, within their niche community. This can create a sense of ownership and belonging within the community.
2. Gamification: Incorporate gamification elements into the platform, such as badges, rewards, and challenges, to incentivize and motivate users to engage more with the platform and the community.
3. Customizable privacy settings: Give users the ability to customize their privacy settings on a granular level, allowing them to control who can see their content and interact with them.
4. Virtual events and meetups: Organize virtual events and meetups for niche communities, such as virtual conferences, networking events, and workshops.
5. Integration with other platforms: Integrate with other platforms, such as e-commerce websites or job search platforms, to provide additional value to users and help them achieve their goals within the community.

give an API to leave the community

Sure! Here's an API to leave a community:

SCSS
router.post('/:id/leave', async (req, res) => { try {
    const community = await Community.findById(req.params.id);
    if (!community) {
      return res.status(404).json({ message: 'Community not found' });

    // Check if the user is a member of the community
    const userId = req.body.userId;
    if (!community.members.includes(userId)) {
      return res.status(400).json({ message: 'User is not a member of the community' });

    // Remove the user from the community's members array community.members = community.members.filter(member => member.toString() !== userId);
    await community.save();

    // Remove the community from the user's communities array
    const user = await User.findById(req.user._id);
    user.communities = user.communities.filter(communityId => communityId !== community._id);
    await user.save();
});

CHALLENGES

- Learning new skills in a short period
- Facing a lot of errors in a complete new domain
- Exploring of new features which doesn't already exist

THANK YOU

UPCOMING FEATURE

Web3 and Blockchain is the future.

So we thought why not try to implement it in our project ahead.

Our new feature will make the texts between the user the decentralised.
